University No Longer Allows President, Football Coach To Take Sexual Harassment Training "Pass/Fail"

In a recent press release, the University of Michigan has announced that a "revised conduct policy for U-M faculty" will prohibit new hires, such as the University President or Head Football Coach, from opting to take the mandatory sexual harassment training course "pass/fail".

The course, which employees take on a university-issued iPad on their own time without external supervision, has been successfully completed by each of the recently-disgraced presidents and coaches.

"In retrospect, it seems that candidates were randomly clicking answers and lucking out with an over 50% pass rate. But in our defense, how were we supposed to know that these men would be untrustworthy? I mean, those million-dollar salaries and incredible positions of power should have been enough to keep them in line," said University spokesperson Kay Jarvis.

"Look, Schlissel managed to pass on his third or fourth try, so we figured he'd finally learned his lesson," claimed U-M Regent Sarah Hubbard. "Regretfully, we only later discovered that he interpreted 'sexual harassment training' to be training on how exactly one ought to engage in sexual misconduct."

Sarah Blanche, who designed the course used by the University, was shocked to hear that U-M ever allowed the course to be taken pass/fail. "Are you fucking kidding me? That course is so easy I can't imagine someone getting below 90%. You literally just have to know what consent is for most of the questions."

Though Noem cultivated a reputation for wanton cruelty to appear relatable to most Americans, more than half of respondents agreed "her time had come."

A recent Pew Research poll has revealed that 52% of Americans support impeaching Secretary of Homeland Security Kristi Noem, and that a further 53% support the additional measure of "taking her out back like her dog."

Although the majority of Americans expressed disgust at Kristi Noem's beliefs and actions, they also reported feeling inspired by a particular section of her 2024 memoir in which she describes killing a "hard to train" hunting dog.

According to the poll, respondents didn't approve of Noem's handling of immigration enforcement. "She's been going out of her mind with excitement about caging all the immigrants in this country," said a baker from Iowa. "It seems we have no choice but do something difficult, messy and ugly to take care of this."

"She's had more than a year to fit into this role. It's very clear that her aggressive personality makes her less than worthless…as the head of Homeland Security," said another respondent. "She definitely needs to be impeached, and I certainly wouldn't mind if she were taken to a gravel pit and let go."

Americans said they planned to tell Kristi Noem's friends in the administration that she would only be going away to a farm upstate where she can shoot all the puppies her heart desires.

Career Advising Center Hires Etsy Witch

Last week, the Ford School of Public Policy career advising office announced that they've hired an in-house Etsy witch to assist students in their job search.

In an email to all undergraduate and graduate students, Philip Johnson, the head of career advising, explained that they decided to expand the team in response to growing difficulty finding jobs in the public sector.

"After extensive searching, we've decided to hire Countess Desdemona Onyx to expand our advising office," Johnson announced. "The Countess has centuries of experience in counseling others to achieve their goals and find personal success by any means necessary. Her longtime experience as a small business owner in Transylvania has equipped her with the skillset necessary to help our students succeed."

Following the announcement, Ford's advising website was updated to reflect several new services that the office offers, including glamour magic to improve interview performances, prosperity spells to manifest long-term stable employment, and multipurpose moon magic. Students may also opt to hex employers who have rejected or ghosted them, although Johnson warned that all dark magic options will require preapproval.

"I'm tremendously excited for this new chapter in my life," said the Countess, "being an Etsy witch was incredibly fulfilling, but I look forward to using my skills to help the next generation of bureaucrats find their futures."

At press time, the career advising team was seen chanting in a circle around a large stack of Ford students' resumes.

Regents Reveal West Quad Named After Kanye

The Regents released a statement announcing that the building's name would be changed and condemning West after he apologized for his hateful comments.

In a press conference last Friday, the University of Michigan Board of Regents announced that the student dorm West Quadrangle was originally named after controversial musician and record producer Kanye West.

"We want to come clean to the student body about the origins of West Quad," said regent Sarah Hubbard. "Though Kanye has never attended the University of Michigan nor openly supported our institution, I think I speak for us all when I say we align with his messages and values. I also resonated deeply with his album 'College Dropout.' 'Graduation' was fine but I was hungover and sweaty the entire time so it was whatever."

During the press conference, the regents fielded several questions concerning their announcement. One reporter asked, "West Quad was built in 1939. West was born in 1978. I still don't understand why he's West Quad's namesake, but more pressingly, how?" To which regent Carl Meyers responded, "Yeezus is timeless and ephemeral or something, I don't know."

Another reporter questioned, "Is North Quad named after anyone?" Again, Hubbard responded, saying, "Uhhhhh, no? Ever heard of the cardinal direction North? Never Eat Soggy Waffles type shit. Idiot. Although, South Quad is actually named after Kanye South and East Quad is named after Kanye East."

Following Kanye West's legal name change to "Ye," the Regents have decided to similarly rename West Quad to Ye Quad.

International Student Making You Guess Where They're From

Last Friday, during an Econ 402 discussion section icebreaker activity, international student Jenny Lee reportedly stated her name, year, and major, before playfully asking her groupmates to guess where she was from.

"To be fair, I told them I'm not from America," said Lee. "That eliminates one entire country. They only had 194 options left to choose from, yet for some reason they all seemed completely panicked."

"I was completely panicked," said sophomore Kenneth Barnes. "I didn't want to seem like I was stereotyping her, so I blurted out 'Antarctica?' I thought that would make me sound worldly and super open minded, but she kind of just looked at me like I was stupid."

"I'm from Michigan, and during my turn I used the hand thing to show everyone where I was from," said junior Kelley Jensen. "But Jenny made her hand into a fist, kind of like a globe? And then pointed to a random spot on it and said that's where she's from. She even told us the exact geographical coordinates of her hometown but that didn't really help."

Despite Lee providing her group members with several helpful hints, such as "it's literally so obvious guys" and "my accent completely gives it away," everyone simply mumbled and averted their eyes until their GSI mercifully began to teach again.

In her next class, Lee reportedly introduced herself as Canadian but then proceeded to ask her fellow students to guess her political affiliation.

Lee also hinted that her country of origin has "amazing food" and will be participating in the Olympics.

Roommate Has Audacity To Do Dishes You Were Putting Off

In an incident that many have described as "disturbing" and "uncalled for," reports alleged that Jack Shamberg, resident of 750 E University, washed the dishes of roommate Jason Manfried, who was "totally going to get around to doing those soon."

"I'm honestly speechless," said Manfried. "Like where does this guy get off? I clearly remember telling Jack a couple of weeks ago that I was going to clean those soon, but today I got back from class to see him elbows deep in soapy water. I feel violated."

According to those familiar with Shamberg, this incident is just the culmination of a long history of disturbing behavior. "The other month, Jack insisted on tidying up our living room," said roommate Will Felder. "He pressured us for like a week, and when we finally relented, he completely messed up my pile of used bowls, half eaten bags of chips, mostly empty beer cans, and homework assignments. I nearly failed a class because of it."

Shamberg's roommates have said that the situation feels hopeless. "We were discussing getting back at him by deep cleaning the bathroom," said Manfried. "But that creep would probably appreciate it. Absolute nightmare roommate."

At press time, the roommates were discussing plans to confront Shamberg about his habit of frequently taking out the trash. "It's just so unfair. He's doing it multiple times a week," said Felder. "All we want is for him to do his fair share of the work."

Students Express Concern About New President's Record, Unpronounceable Last Name

With the University's presidential search process finally complete, many students are eager to turn over a new leaf. However, many others have expressed reservations about his track record, and above all concerns about the unpronounceability of Kent Subaru's name.

"I heard he shut down DEI at Syracuse and did some stuff with an oil company, so I felt let down but at least could take comfort in the fact that nothing was really going to change," LSA junior Tyler Green said. "But then I read his name and nearly had a stroke. How do you even pronounce that, See-var-ood? I'm already drowning in orgo, I don't have time to learn that."

"He said we were Iranian agitators, but honestly that's pretty tame compared to a lot of people nowadays so who cares," Pro-Palestine student activist Aisha Hammoud said. "But Seeverygood's name just does not work for chants. Ono and Grasso were really good — hell, Ono's name was literally "oh no," there's infinite creative potential there. Now it's like why should I even care about losing my free speech when I can't even pronounce his name?"

Not all reactions to Sliverood's name have been negative. Norwegian exchange student Bjorn Skjævëland said he was "personally thrilled" to see him become president.

In response to the news, the University's various language departments banded together to form a committee that would discover exactly how to pronounce Superglue's name, but so far no answers have been found. Shortly before press time, one linguist was heard screaming "How does a person simultaneously have too few and too many vowels in your name?"

Graduated Senior Lurking

Students across campus have reported seeing Jason Snipes, a former engineering student, who they believe graduated last semester, lurking on the second and third floors of buildings throughout campus.

"I could've sworn he said he was graduating last semester," said Cynthia Flowers, a chemical engineering student who was on ChemE Car with Snipes, and reportedly saw him in the Dude. "Like I think he got the chords and stuff last semester, but I swear he was sitting across from me at one of the second floor tables whispering about an offer letter. When I looked up, no one was there. It was spooky."

Paul Meyer, a student in Economics, said that he too thought he saw Snipes in line at Rick's at 4pm on a Tuesday. "I remember thinking: 'Didn't he graduate?' I'm pretty sure he got a job at Disney or BP or Palantir or Raytheon or something. When I turned to ask him a question, he vanished, so I guess I'll never know."

Other students have reported hearing Snipes saying that he was "auditing a Chem 130 discussion session" while others reportedly heard him bemoaning over not renewing his MCard to keep all his student discounts for years after graduation. One student claimed to have heard Snipes talking about how he was "making up for all that useless studying he did" with a goal of "turning every week into a 7 day bender."

At press time, Snipes' name was reportedly seen on a list of students who were enrolled in SUGS, the College of Engineering's one year master's program, but the authenticity of the list is hotly disputed.

Turning Point UMich Planning Spring Break Trip To Venezuela

The University of Michigan's chapter of Turning Point USA has announced that their annual spring break trip will visit the country of Venezuela.

The South American country was recently thrown into chaos when US forces invaded and captured its former president Nicolas Maduro. But according to Ted Johnson, president of The University's TPUSA chapter, this isn't a problem. "Sure, it's a little nerve wracking going to a country that still has free universal healthcare and education, but we're confident that in President Trump's big, persuasive hands, they'll fix that in no time."

Members of the club say there's a lot to look forward to. "I'm most excited to try the local cuisine," said sophomore Emily Woodman. "You know, stuff like Chipotle. Just as long as they don't make it too spicy."

"I'm really looking forward to getting some oil while I'm there," said Jack Robertson, another club member. "Don't get me wrong, I love fracking, but nothing beats some good old fashioned crude oil. It's hard to explain, but I have this primal urge to extract oil from foreign countries."

According to the club, this trip has garnered record interest from students. "We haven't had this many signups for a spring break trip since we went to Libya in 2012," said social chair Karlie Chalk. "And past trips have become stuff of legend. Apparently Iraq '04 was a rager. We're very proud of this club's tradition of visiting the US's newest allies."

At press time, the club was seen reminiscing about their recent MLK weekend trip to Greenland. "It was really inspiring to see so many undisplaced indigenous people and such pristine wilderness," said Johnson. "There's so much growth potential."

Mr. Brightside To Be Replaced With LDS Hymn: 'Come, Come, Ye Saints'

Following the recent firing of head football coach Sherrone Moore, new head coach Kyle Whittingham, a BYU Alumnus and former head coach of the University of Utah, announced that the University is changing the end of the third quarter song from "Mr Brightside" by the Killers to "Come, Come, Ye Saints", an LDS hymn, in an effort to improve school and program culture.

"We, as a program, believe that Mr Brightside, a song about getting cheated on, contributed to the series of events resulting in Former Head Coach Moore's firing," explained Whittingham in a recent press conference. "We believe that changing the song to Come, Come, Ye Saints will instill a sense of work ethic, eternally seal the audience and team together in a happy marriage, and get the broader University community to soak it all in and come together."

Some in the community have expressed concerns over the slower tempo but Elder Jedediah Young, director of the LDS Tabernacle choir who will be providing the recording, explained that the song "really gets the older members excited" and that "the hymn will allow for much needed reflection going into the fourth quarter to allow us to gather strength and define a more godly path forward towards the celestial kingdom where another national title awaits."

Chad Brawnson, a brother of Lambda Delta Sigma, said, "Brother Kimball and Brother Smith told me that they saw these plates saying there are actually five quarters when we're down, not four. A pretty fetching awesome change if you ask me. Kinda crap they want us to tithe 10% of our tuition dollars for the licensing fees but the new dirty soda station is pretty hecking lit!"

At press time the athletic department was looking at replacing the James Earl Jones hype video with AI-generated footage of the Mormon journey to Utah.

Shower Mold Evicted For Rent Nonpayment

"After conducting inspections of all of our properties, we realized that several houses had tenants that were not listed on the original lease, and who weren't paying any kind of rent," said Hugo Gilbert, a spokesman for Cambio Properties.

Many of the house's human tenants are thankful for the move, but noted that they had been asking for help with the mold problem for years.

"This house has consistently had black mold in the bathroom since we moved in two years ago," said Abby Maher, a Cambio Properties resident. "For years our landlord has always told us that it wasn't his problem. But once he realized that the mold was free-loading, he made the eviction swift."

Cambio Properties has reported that the "several rodent families" living in their rentals will not be evicted, as they have yet to miss any rent payments.

In response to criticism, Gilbert reminded residents that "their health and safety is a personal responsibility. Allowing unapproved tenants, however, is a serious breach of contract that could risk all of their residences."

"We estimate that the unpaying mold cost us several million in profit," said Gilbert, "human residents should be thankful we didn't throw them out too given how much their negligence has cost us."

The mold, meanwhile, has reported difficulty finding new housing with an eviction record. After extensive searching, they resigned themselves to living in a co-op, which welcomed them with open arms.

POLSCI Dept. Clarifies It Will Not Offer Degree Refunds Should Laws Stop Existing

In a recent public announcement, the University of Michigan Department of Political Science clarified that "refunds for degrees in Political Science" would "not be offered" in the event that laws "stop existing."

"We wish to reassure all current and prospective political science students that a degree in the field will always be worth pursuing," explained Department Chair Geoff Govurrment. "In the event that all political conventions are destroyed and any semblance of rule of law is eroded in the near future, which we do not think is likely by the way, political science students at the University of Michigan will still have received a bounty of knowledge about 19th-century philosophy and means testing worth the thousands of dollars that they spent on tuition."

"I was really getting worried about my job prospects after graduation," said POLSCI senior Jane Clements. "Turns out everything I learned about the structure and history of the American government was kind of completely made up, yeah, but to me the real importance of a degree in political science is the opportunity to develop communication skills and learn to work in collaboration with others."

Polling suggests that the majority of U-M Political Science students were "unconcerned" by the announcement. According to POLSCI junior Leah Kristoff, "if there's one thing I've learned from my major so far, it's that laws never really existed in the first place."

Professor Miraculously Works Pet Goldendoodle Into Every Lecture

Professor Pearson even brought Zeus to lecture once, for what he proclaimed was "bring your child to work day."

Students in Professor Mike Pearson's Psych 111 section have been "continually impressed" by his ability to include his 5 year old goldendoodle, Zeus, into every class's lecture.

"I think I see that dog more than my own mother," commented freshman Greg Olsen. "We were learning about neurotransmitters the other day when he randomly flipped to a slide with a picture of Zeus to give us a 'serotonin boost.'"

"It's kinda strange, really, since the only time he's ever talked about his wife and children was syllabus week," commented sophomore Hailey Sharma. "He seems to only ever mention the dog whenever he refers to 'family.' He even forgot the name of his youngest daughter the other day."

"On our midterm, Zeus was used in 40/50 questions," recalled Olsen. "I thought I was having a manic episode or something. He even put his picture on the back of the test packet."

"He usually starts the class talking about 'Zeus updates," explained Sharma. "I vividly remember him going into incredible detail about when he got the lipoma on his foot removed. Him telling that story took half the class, actually."

In the final exam, Pearson's students were recorded as being unable to identify Sigmund Freud, yet a majority were able to earn the extra credit by recalling details of Zeus's life with astounding accuracy. "All I could think about were those soulless eyes," recalled Olsen, who finished the class with a C but was nonetheless able to tell our team the name of Zeus's mother when probed.

Michigan Daily Sex Survey Reveals No One Freakier Than Newspaper Desperate To Record Students' Sex Lives

After the publishing of the 13th annual Sex Survey, in which The Michigan Daily collected responses from just over 3,000 University of Michigan students, readers were once again unsurprised to note that the freakiest individuals on campus seemed to be the ones in the newsroom desperate to annually record deeply intimate knowledge about their peers.

After repeatedly thanking the participating students for being so open about their sexual interests, and apologizing for constantly checking in to remind students to fill out the survey, the authors noted that they "intensely savored the process of aggregating the data."

"It's super weird to imagine someone my age conjuring up questions about how often I masturbate and then using their STATS 250 knowledge to create a bar graph to correlate it with how long I last in bed," Engineering sophomore Tim Chambers said. "And then when I provided my open-ended comments on how some of the questions made me uncomfortable, they pasted my exact response in the publication with a note saying 'Get a LOAD of this guy…'"

"Stupid jokes aside, no amount of their data analysis could have obscured how inexcusably horny the writers were while compiling the results," Ross senior Maya Devlekar commented. "They put their phone numbers in the last paragraph 'in case anybody wanted to expand on their experiences off-the-record.'"

Respondents were also again asked to provide their relationship status, contraception usage, favorite sex positions, a detailed description of their last sexual encounter with an emphasis on "the exciting parts," and access to their Life360 and phone's photo apps.

At press time, Daily editors unanimously voted to require all participants in next year's data collection to submit nude body scans of themselves.

Investigation Reveals Stamps Never Made Stamps

An ongoing internal investigation carried out by the Stamps School of Art and Design recently uncovered that, despite its name, the school did not have, and never has had, any part in the production or design of postage stamps.

Robyn McMillan, a current student from Stamps, shared her side of the story: "I can't believe this news. I mean, I was excited to learn about the arts and the designs, but what really drew me to this school was the potential to make stamps that we could distribute to post offices around the globe, and maybe even make a difference in the world. I might consider transferring now. I'm not sure what I'm going to do." Another Stamps student, Rosalyn Trujillo, added, "I came here for a postdoc, but now there's no postage anywhere. I'm thoroughly disappointed."

"We just thought it was in the course catalog somewhere," stated current U-M Stamps Dean Carlos Jackson in a press statement this past Monday. "We are committed to upholding a culture of respect, integrity, and accountability, and in that regard will continue our investigation until we truly uncover the nature of the situation."

Some students outside of Stamps also had things to say. Giovanni Frazier, an engineering student, asked: "What can this University actually do right? I'm losing faith that we can adequately name buildings on campus. I mean, what if it comes out that the Ugli is actually pretty all of a sudden? What then?"

At press time, the University's board held a meeting to discuss changing the school's name from Stamps to Email, in an attempt to modernize the program.

Heated Rivalry Season 2 To Replace Word "Asshole" With "Bunghole"

Last Thursday, HBO announced on its social media platforms that the upcoming second season of the hit show Heated Rivalry will exclusively use the term "bunghole" instead of "asshole."

"The network and creators of the show agreed that Season 1 of Heated Rivalry overused the word 'asshole,'" announced HBO in an X post. "Next season, to spice things up, we feel the word 'bunghole' will add more intrigue. Who knows, we might even show a little bunghole too."

The actors of the show were very vocal about their support for this recent decision. In a press interview, actor Hudson Williams, who plays Canadian hockey player Shane Hollander, said "I am so excited for bunghole. I love bunghole. I love the way it feels in my mouth. The word, I mean." As he said this, actor Connor Storrie, who plays Ilya Rozanov, merely stared at him with concern.

HBO assured viewers that instead of hearing Shane Hollander say "God, you're such an asshole," three times per episode, they can instead look forward to hearing "God, you're such a freaking bunghole," no less than twenty times.

Box Fan Forced To Work Another All-Nighter

The fan which hasn't been wiped of dust in over three years also has a blade missing and takes about five minutes to get up to speed on any setting. "It's been through a lot," said LaGuardia. "But that thing is a warrior. I can't live without it."

Lasko representatives, however, are upset about LaGuardia's lack of concern for the wellbeing of his box fan. "Under no circumstances should our exceptional fans be subjected to such mistreatment," warned local rep Todd McWind. "LaGuardia must reconsider the work-life balance of his fan, or else there will be consequences."

In response, LaGuardia voiced his frustration. "Those bastards. I bought this fan and can do whatever I want with it. I need its rattly hum to soothe my loud thoughts and deliver me to REM sleep."

At press time, there were rumblings about the formation of a climate controlling labor union for fans, air conditioning units, and space heaters.

Study Finds Dull Knife Won't Injure Pure Of Heart

Kinematics researchers at the University of Michigan have made a breakthrough discovery that a dull knife, despite usually being a safety hazard, will never wound a "sufficiently pure-hearted" user.

"Conventional wisdom is that a sharper knife is easier to control, and makes for an overall safer kitchen environment," explained head researcher Stephen Marshe. "However, our experiments have proven that if your spirit is unmarked and your intentions are pure, a dull blade is only half as likely as usual to snag and deglove one of your fingers."

"Look, college cooking is all about convenience and simple methods, I'm always looking for something easier over something fancier," said LSA junior Rita Parker. "Do I seem like I can be bothered to sharpen a knife? Hell no, especially not after learning that positive thinking is more than enough to shield me from julienning my pinky like a fresh carrot."

"Continuing to use the same paring knife you've been abusing since freshman year is mostly an exercise in finding tranquility in your soul," claimed avid dull knife user Shaun Brown. "It's about learning to accept that eating your own blood isn't a biohazard, and that skin shavings in your onions is a way to get extra protein."

At press time, Parker was seen searching for UHS on Google Maps with one hand.

The study has prompted further research into whether dull razors are similarly safe for "bearded but jolly" individuals.

Treasury Department Announces A Third Of Liquid U.S. Assets Recently Invested Into Pokémon Cards

Secretary of the Treasury Scott Bessent shared with Press Monday that 2025 financing activities saw a little more than a third of liquid U.S. assets being invested in Pokémon card singles, sealed product, and graded slabs.

"We closely tracked the return-on-investment of trading cards from the Pokémon series and noticed that they produced nearly triple the returns over the last two years than any of our securities had," Bessent said. "As such, we made the decision to invest about thirty billion dollars into collectibles such as gem mint 1st Edition Charizard's and Pikachu Illustrator copies."

Over the next few months, the Treasury intends to create an eBay account to resell chase card singles, and ask the Bureau of Land Management to sell lithium mine rights to China in exchange for XY Evolutions and Roaring Skies sealed booster boxes.

"All of those scalpers you see at Target and Walmart are actually government employees working to collect card stock for our reserves," Bessent later commented. "We recognize that this may be upsetting for casual collectors and children, and that many will complain people like us are ruining the hobby, but we have to prevent Social Security from going insolvent somehow."

After making the announcement, Bessent walked away from the podium carrying a Pokémon-themed binder with a ripped-up, half-missing leatherette cover and snot stains visible on the back, before going on to snatch an unopened Elite Trainer Box out of a nearby five-year-old's hands.

At press time, Bessent was seen cracking a slab containing an Umbreon Gold Star that PSA returned graded as an 8, but "definitely deserved at least a 9."

New Epstein Files Release Includes No Mentions Of Island, Flights, Epstein

The White House has released another small batch of the Epstein files, having now released slightly under 2% of the mandated 5 million files that were legally required to go public by December. "Some powerful people are gonna be in real trouble after this," stated Pam Bondi upon the release of the new files. Civilians and politicians alike, however, were quick to point out that the new release lacks not only any mention of wrongdoing by people of power, but any mention of Jeffrey Epstein whatsoever.

"We are the most transparent administration in American history," proclaimed president Donald Trump at a press conference, "and we have nothing to hide! Just today, they're telling me, my people are saying that today we released over 10,000 shopping lists, McDonald's receipts, and printed JPEGs of Hot Wheels cars straight from the files of some people who we think kind of knew Epstein, great guys. Oh, those Hot Wheels are mine I think. Well, I'm getting a note right now. He's handing me a note, people, and it says that this isn't going very well. Well, you can fuck right off, Marco Rubio."

One document appears to be a handwritten letter from former president Bill Clinton to a local Mexican restaurant near his home in New York, reading "Let me say, your burrito bowls are just too damn spicy. I had one of them just a few moons ago and, oh boy, it threw me for a loop." Another document is a piece of notebook paper with what appears to be Donald Trump's handwriting in permanent marker, reading "UHHHHH LET ME BE CLEAR, I AM A PEDOFILE. -OBAMNA."

This will be the final Epstein files release for the foreseeable future, as the DOGE savings have already been blown entirely on black ink to redact any and all important details from the documents.

Man Inflated From Blowjob Gone Wrong

A local young man was hospitalized with life-threatening injuries after being subject to a particular bout of poorly executed but well-intentioned fellatio.

Several close friends of the victim, a computer engineering student named Derek Dabrowski, recounted receiving a series of texts from him throughout the night of the event, including, "playing clash royale rn lmao", "this girl is lowkey blowing air into my urethra," and "i need to go to a hospital right now".

"I feel downright terrible about it," said SMTD student Patricia Reyes, whose connection to the incident need not be mentioned. "Derek is a really nice guy, probably the nicest guy I've ever been on a date with. He never calls me fat or starts playing Valorant when I'm trying to talk to him, and so I really wanted to impress him. Honestly, when he asked me to do it, I thought it sounded pretty odd and kind of painful. But I had nothing to lose, and so I just did what I had to do—I blew as hard as I could. I blew with the force of a thousand winds."

Dabrowski, who was rushed from the basement of Mary Markley Hall to St. Joseph Mercy Hospital last Friday night, noted that he'd felt his ears pop "ever so slightly."

"I had a bit of sinus pressure that's much improved now," Dabrowski commented.

At press time, Reyes was reported to have tossed several salads for her dates in a homemade gourmet truffle vinaigrette, complete with pine nuts and pickled onions for garnish.

Timothée Chalamet Wins Golden Globe, "Fuck You, Where's My Oscar" Says Chalamet

Acclaimed actor Timothée Chalamet received the Golden Globe Award for Actor in a Musical or Comedy Film for his 2025 film "Marty Supreme." In his acceptance speech, he cursed out the voting board and the audience, loudly yelling "Fuck you! Where's my Oscar?!"

The speech seems to be another step in the extended marketing campaign for Marty Supreme, which has seen Chalamet adopt a confident attitude and an open desire to be "the greatest," similar to his character in the film. This speech, however, has been characterized by many as "a little too far."

After cursing out the award presenters, Chalamet began slamming the Golden Globe trophy into the podium repeatedly, remarking "What is this fucking thing made of, plastic? What the hell is this?" Golden Globes representatives stated that the damage to the podium was worth roughly 700 dollars.

As the song "Everybody Wants to Rule the World" by Tears for Fears (which was featured in the film) began playing to indicate the end of Chalamet's time, he defiantly stayed put and began singing along. However, it was evident that he did not know all of the words to the song, as he mumbled "Ba ba ba ba ba made it… I hate you guys so much right now and, everybodies wants to rule something."

Security's repeated attempts to remove Chalamet from the stage eventually culminated in a 48-hour police standoff in which Chalamet threatened to kill Bob Dylan "for everything he did to me." Eventually, Chalamet was arrested, and his bail was paid by his partner Kylie Jenner on the condition that he go back to playing "sad little twinks."

Frog Confused Why Water Bubbling, Really Hot All Of A Sudden

A scorpion who lived on McRibbit's back for some time was equally surprised to find himself suddenly drowning after stinging his friend.

Local frog Hopps McRibbit said last Wednesday that he became confused upon suddenly realizing the water in which he had been "peacefully" and "contentedly" residing was bubbling and "really, really hot."

"I was just chilling there in what I thought was a perfectly normal bucket of water," McRibbit said. "Then out of nowhere, with no prior indication whatsoever, it suddenly erupts into a boil!"

Leaplyn Lilypad attended Pond High with McRibbit. She described him as oblivious to the surrounding world and said she was not surprised to hear that he had wound up in a boiling pot of water. "Frogs like that give us all a bad reputation," Lilypad said. "People think we're all fucking stupid just because a few of us can't tell when the temperature is changing. A lot of us have no trouble figuring out when everything around us is starting to burn."

McRibbit admitted that, in hindsight, there were some things that should have been warning signs. "Come to think of it, it was quite strange to hear a booming voice say 'I'm going to turn on the burner now.' And salt doesn't usually just fall from the sky like that."

Undersized Olympic Hockey Rink To Promote More Homoerotic Relationships Between Players

In response to controversy around the size of the ice at the 2026 Milan-Cortina Winter Games being three feet shorter than a standard NHL rink, Olympic organizers said that the change was not an error and instead an attempt to increase the sexual tension between hockey players.

"If you put that many big, sweaty men together in close quarters, something hot is bound to happen," said Andrea Varnier, head of the Milan-Cortina Winter Olympics Committee. "These past few months have made it clear what hockey viewers want, and we intend to deliver." The committee is hoping that things don't get so heated that the ice completely melts away. If so, Varnier has stated that she doesn't care one way or the other.

International Olympic Committee president Kirsty Coventry supported the move. "It's the Olympic's mission to highlight the pinnacle of athletic excellence, and recognize those who edge out the competition with their skills at stick handling and shooting hard," said Coventry.

"Who doesn't wanna see guys like Sidney Crosby and Auston Matthews grinding up really close and hard on the ice?" exclaimed hockey reporter Elliotte Friedman. "Professional hockey has always missed this passionate dimension. Oh boy, I'm getting excited even thinking about it."

Teams have recently been overheard getting into the spirit. USA coach Mike Sullivan has reportedly instructed players to "ride him, hard," "stay on his ass," "rub them out on the boards," and "suck guys down low in the defensive zone." Sullivan objected, saying that all was typical hockey talk. "When I want my players to have gay sex, I just say that straight up. I'm not a pussy."

At press time, the IOC was considering allowing the banned Russian team to compete in a single game against the Canadian team in an effort to spark a real-life Heated Rivalry romance.

Local Boy Spends Morning Longing For "Just One More" Vitamin Gummy

This past Wednesday, local first-grader Timmy Franklin spent his morning yearning for another vitamin gummy after receiving his recommended daily amount of two with breakfast. Franklin's parents report that their son "pouted and whined" for the entire duration of his ride to school.

"This unfortunately has become a common occurrence for Timmy," said Franklin's father, Tony. "It pains me to see my boy like that, but what are we supposed to do? The nutritional facts on the vitamin bottle recommend just two gummies per day."

"I've had to hide the bottle from him because he's so obsessed with them," reported Franklin's mother, Tonya. "Last week, we tried to mix things up and give him the chalky Flintstone vitamins instead, but he got really upset and said they 'wouldn't provide enough daily nutritional support for his growing body.'"

Franklin's desire for gummy vitamins even continued into his school day. "Timmy had a really hard time focusing and didn't even play with his friends. I asked him what was wrong and he kept repeating, 'need more vitamins.'"

At press time, Big Pharma scientists were seen adding Haribo gummies into a Men's One-A-Day bottle.

Old Dog Learns New Trick: Dying Slowly

Giles also reported that Smoky has been learning to grow new, misshapen lumps of flesh all over his body.

Local 15-year-old greyhound 'Smoky' succeeded in what many believed to be the impossible– learning a new trick.

Smoky's owner, Joseph 'Joey' Giles, has taught Smoky a variety of tricks over his extensive lifespan, from shaking paws to grabbing beers for Giles and his friends. However, it appears that Smoky has taught himself his latest trick: dying slowly. "No one should have ever underestimated old Smokes," Giles said.

"The dog is a goddam genius… but ever since his stroke last year, we thought his prime was over," reflected one of Giles' friends, Harry North. "But I was over at Joey's house with some of the guys the other day to watch the playoffs when Smoky started acting up all of a sudden."

North and the others in attendance report that Smoky hobbled up to the group and began to sequentially drop four of his teeth onto the floor. "I thought he was having another stroke, to be honest," stated North. "But the old guy just shuffled on up and those teeth just started falling. Totally zoned out, too. Was freaky as all hell, but hey, I gave him a high-paw for it. He's known how to do that one for a while."

"Old Smokes is always surprising us," reported Giles. "He can barely move around anymore, and since last Tuesday I don't think he can quite see through his left eye, but it's the little things, you know? Mostly because he can't really do big things anymore."

After Smoky successfully dropped four of his yellowed teeth, the group watched in awe as Smoky promptly walked to the corner and slept for the next 16 hours.

Racing Movie Protagonist Finds The Strength To Push The Pedal Even Harder

Audience members also said Speed "was changing gears like a man possessed."

Deciding that the moment had arrived, "Faster Than Fast" protagonist Jax Speed miraculously found the strength to start pressing the pedal harder now.

"I had just finished my mid race flashback routine of my dead wife," said Speed. "Normally I wait until the flashbacks of my dead dad before really going for it, but I felt like trying something new."

In a move that captivated the audience, Jax Speed was able to overtake his archrival Trax Limit on the home stretch, eking out the win by 50 microseconds.

"I thought he was finished when his engine gave out, but then he just started pressing that gas pedal and he was right back in it," said movie-goer Alex Wang. "And he did it with only three tires too!"

"Ever since the incident Jax has had a really hard time putting the pedal to the metal," said Speed's manager Shane Mann. "But when he started pressing that pedal I knew he had come to peace with the deaths of his loved ones from various racing related incidents."

At press time Speed dedicated his victory to his dead mother and three dead children.

Congress Assures Trump They Intend To Write All New Bills As Suggestions

On Friday, the US House of Representatives and Senate unanimously agreed that all possible future laws they send to President Trump's desk will be suggestions, with no intention of being implemented.

"We were worried that, in writing bills with the intent to have them be enforced, Trump may think we still intend to uphold the system of checks and balances," Senate Majority Leader John Thune said in a statement. "Trump said the only check on his authority that will stop him is his own morality. This means the legislative branch needs to step out of the way by only giving suggestions for possible laws, until he gives us a bill pre-written by his Administration."

"I appreciate the assurance, but I was already vetoing or ignoring any bill they tried to pass by themselves," Trump later said. "All I need to see is that a cosponsor was a backwards Democrat and it goes straight in the bin." In front of the White House Press Pool, Trump then used the Ensuring Clean Water For All Act to demonstrate how Congress' bills can be easily folded into a paper airplane.

"I really took Stephen Miller's comment about Trump's plenary authority to heart," said California Democrat Scott Adams. "It makes my job much easier when I don't have to worry about Trump not liking a bill I try to pass, and subsequently running a smear campaign in my district so that I lose my upcoming primary."

At press time, Speaker of the House Mike Johnson was seen installing an incinerator into the wall of the Oval Office with the goal of making it possible for Trump to discard multiple bills at once.

Masturbating To Heated Rivalry Straight Woman's Only Form Of Allyship

Area heterosexual Tara Langsly reportedly pleasures herself while watching hit HBO show Heated Rivalry as an act of allyship to the LGBTQ+ community. Reports also indicate that Langsly practices no other forms of allyship.

"Gay rights are really important to me," Langsly said. "Like, the right to make out on camera. And the right to have sex on camera. And, y'know, all the other ones. That's why I watch Heated Rivalry, to show my support and loudly cry out my approval during all the scenes where they exercise their gay rights."

Jane Kearst, formerly a friend of Langsly, said she was surprised to hear that Langsly now describes herself as an LGBTQ+ ally.

"Oh really? Because when I came out to her as a lesbian she literally walked to the other side of the room, like I was contagious or something."

Despite never having watched a hockey game once in her entire life, Langsly now plans to purchase season tickets. "I just want to go and support all of the gay hockey players out there on the ice. I want to see them, er, I want to make them feel seen as their true selves. Assuming their true selves are having gay sex."

At press time, apparently forgetting that the whole point of being gay is to not be a woman's boyfriend, Langsly said, "I love my gay hockey boyfriends!"

Meteorologist Warns Of Extreme Cold, Record Snow, Falling Anvils Amid Polar Vortex

St. Clair warned that people had reportedly experienced brief moments of mid-air suspension after running off cliffs, only to then suddenly fall and become embedded in the ground.

The country has been blasted with extreme weather in the past couple of weeks thanks to a polar vortex sweeping across the nation. According to Chief Meteorologist Brett St. Clair, citizens should "be wary of extreme cold, heavy snow fall, and falling anvils."

"Everyone is talking about this exploding tree warning up in the Upper Peninsula, but I think they should be more concerned about the falling anvils," St. Clair said. "While they most likely won't kill you, they will definitely cause you to grow a super large bump on your head, and have birds flying around said bump."

According to St. Clair, it is not just anvils that can form in this extreme weather. "While the falling anvils are probably the most likely thing to fall on your head, there are other objects to be on the lookout for. Make sure you keep an eye out for grand pianos, bathtubs, large bank vaults, and precariously placed rakes. This extreme cold front creates enough pressure to form these things."

John Mankowitz, a victim of a falling grand piano during the 2014 polar vortex, warns to "keep your head on a swivel." He explained that after the Steinway fell on him, "My teeth ended up turning into the piano keys, and driving to the dentist in that weather was horrible."

At press time, St. Clair gave instructions on how to paint a tunnel on a large boulder if you need to take refuge from an anvil, or hungry coyote.

Boeing To Hire Murders And Acquisitions Interns For Summer 2026

Instead of hiring Mergers and Acquisitions interns this summer, Boeing has announced they are planning to recruit college students for a new role called Murders and Acquisitions.

"We're really looking to hire a people person for this position," said Cindy King, Chief Recruiting Officer at Boeing. "They should know people inside and out—for instance, how to make a person's wounds look self-inflicted."

According to the job description on Boeing's website, interns will have the chance to really get their hands dirty in this thrilling new field. Candidates should be able to work well under pressure, be very meticulous, and not feel faint at the sight of blood.

The job description also notes that there is no minimum GPA requirement, but ideal candidates are students who know how to lie low and aren't too actively engaged in campus extracurriculars. "Just in case they have to flee the country," explained King. "I mean, in case they feel like seeking an exciting opportunity to expand their horizons abroad!"

"Yeah, I don't like it either," said Johnathan Nielsen, a recent Boeing Murders and Acquisitions applicant. "But the pay is good, I'd be getting a lot of money, and also the salary is pretty decent. And I have, like, a ton of previous experience. I've killed four people."

Girl With Dirty Boyfriend Unsure Why She Gets So Many UTIs

Reports find a growing number of women who have dirty boyfriends expressed uncertainty about the cause of their constant UTIs.

"I have had one UTI a week for the past year. I don't understand why. I pee after sex, that's supposed to stop it, right?" said Claire Spitz, LSA junior and chronic UTI haver. Friends of Spitz, however, report that the reason for her UTIs is abundantly clear. Brooklyn Matthews, a friend of Spitz, said, "If you see Claire's boyfriend, you'll understand why she has this problem. He always has a sort of smell to him. It's hard to describe but it certainly is not a clean smell." Other friends of Spitz reported, "he always looks a little bit wet."

Spitz's doctor, Dr. Nap, has encouraged Spitz to end her relationship: "The only reasonable medical treatment I can think of is for her to break up with her dirty boyfriend. I have prescribed her Macrobid, our primary antibiotic for urinary tract infections, so many times I am worried she is developing resistance to the drug. We must now focus on prevention, rather than treatment."

When asked about his hygiene habits, Spitz's dirty boyfriend, Connor Schultz, said, "I don't understand why I am being accused of being dirty. I use Dove's 3 in 1 bodywash. I use it once every three days. I'm following the instructions. I don't get it." Schultz continued, "Claire asked me to wash my sheets last week. She's been such a bitch recently. She's probably PMSing or something."

At press time, Schultz was seen participating in his favorite hobby, competitive dumpster diving, before guzzling the entirety of his girlfriend's jug of cranberry juice in his fridge.

Schultz pledged to start using condoms after finding some while dumpster diving.

Please Just Get Me The Fuck Out Of Here Already

By: Domenico Grasso

Dear Colleagues and Students,

Please just let me leave already. This shit is way too much for me, and I swear if I have to sit next to Sarah Hubbard at a Regents meeting one more time I'm going to kill myself before the new guy even takes charge. I don't know how the hell he's going to manage this job, I'm about to head into retirement and he's only a year younger than I am.

People say oh, the way your administration is treating protesters is really mean and unfair. You want to know what else it is? Fucking EXHAUSTING. I do not want to hear another chant outside my window, and to be completely honest I don't want to shake the hand of another administrator or businessman either. I've been travelling all around for this stupid "Look to Michigan" fundraising campaign — bitch I've been looking to a vacation home in Florida for the past six months. Maybe Ono had the right idea after all.

Being Chancellor of UM-Dearborn was chill: I was well-paid and obscure and didn't have to do too much. This gig is completely different. In June we'll have had five presidents in just as many years, and, to be honest, the only thing that's surprising to me about that is the fact that there weren't more. The football team wasn't even good this year, I've just been riding the Blue Bus in a circle waiting for the sweet release of death. Hopefully three million a year will keep the new guy here for a little bit, because you could not pay me to do this shit one second longer.

Sincerely,

Would You Still Love Me?

By: Your Girlfriend Who Was (Hypothetically) Turned Into A Worm

Hey…so…hypothetically…would you still love me if I was a worm? Like the no arms and legs, no face, wiggly kind you see on the sidewalk after it rains.

You know, hypothetically of course, dating a worm wouldn't be that bad. I mean for one I would have a bunch of segmented rings allowing me to quickly move through the dirt. I'd also be pocket sized so you could take me around in a little cup and feed me dining hall scraps! Instead of spending all that money on a nice dinner, you can just give me apple cores and rotting lettuce leaves. Hypothetically of course because it'd be totally crazy if I was actually a worm.

Did you know that worms are hermaphrodites and have both male and female reproductive organs? If I was, hypothetically, a worm, we could try out all that kinky stuff you mentioned liking. Sure, we'd have to get creative with it but I'm sure you could make it work in this, hypothetical, scenario. Because you make sacrifices for those you love. And you love me. Right?

The lack of eyes would be kinda bad. I mean I couldn't see your face but I also wouldn't care if you were wearing that horrible Garfield t-shirt you insist on wearing at least once a week…wait I mean I love that t-shirt babe. It looks great… I'm definitely glad I'll get to see it again next week. With my human eyes.

Just think about all the benefits that would occur if I was, hypothetically, a worm! Just make sure you call me to tell me your response because I want to hear your lovely voice with my definite human ears and not through my skin because that would be weird and worm-like which I'm definitely not.

Asking The Experts: Will The Ypsi Data Center Be Used For Nuclear Weapons?

Such an idea is completely preposterous, the University of Michigan / Los Alamos state-of-the-art, high-performance computing center will only be used for the most uncontroversial research imaginable. Have you heard of cancer? Well, we're going to cure it here, I think. Are you some kind of sick freak that likes cancer and wants it to keep existing and killing people? Anyways it's a data—I mean computing center, so it's not like we can MANUFACTURE nuclear weapons or anything. It's not a factory after all. Do people use computers for nuclear weapons research? Probably not, I wouldn't know. Don't worry about it. Anyways, I need to go ignore some emails from Ypsilanti Township, so shut up and stop complaining.

So… That's Illegal

By: Lawyer Reacting To Ocean's Eleven

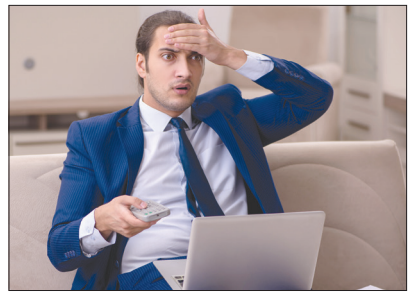
Okay, yeah, pause the video right there. Guys, I don't know if you can see this, because you don't have a law degree and I do, but the move he's pulling right here is actually illegal. If we zoom in about ninety percent, we can see that this guy is putting the money in the bag. Yeah, money that doesn't belong to him. That's what we in the law business call a robbery. That'll get you two-to-nine years in the state of California. Christ, these guys have no respect for the law. Anyways, let's continue.

Wow, hold on. I'm sorry guys, I know I'm pausing a lot, but it's like this entire movie is full of crime. Hell, I think they might all be con men. If we reverse this scene right here and slow it down, you can see that he just punched that other guy in the face without his consent. That's what we call assault, and it's illegal in the state of California. All of these characters would've been behind bars if I was there, let me tell you.



WHAT THE FUCK, THAT SUITCASE IS FULL OF EXPLOSIVES? Oh my god guys I have to just stop watching this. It's literally glorifying crime. I beg all of you, my viewers, please never pull a heist without knowing the legal risk of doing so.

Anyways, please go ahead and click that like button down below. If you would like to see similar content, hit that link at the bottom of your screen to go watch "Real Innocent Inmate Reacts to Shawshank Redemption." And you know what? The only thing more illegal than Ocean's Eleven is being prevented from watching French Netflix. That's why today I've partnered with Nord VP–
